Echo, can you give me some computer advice? You seem to be about the most knowledgeable person here (no offense to anyone else) as far as the mechanics of every day use go. My problem is that I used IE which I like just fine but now when I click on a link such as you have below my computer can no longer find the page, I get the "this page cannot be displayed" and I'm advised that the web site wants the following add on – "Shell Doc Object and Control Library from Microsoft Corporation". Then I'm told to download it. This scares me. I don't know what it is, tried to do a Google search, found tons of hits and understood not a damned thing. So, I have Netscape and figured I'd just change to that. Well, I can't figure out how to make that the default browser. In my old computer, every time I used another available browser I got a message asking me if I wanted to make that the default. That isn't happening. I sent an e-mail to the help people and didn't get a response. I'd rather use the IE because that's where all my bookmarks are and I don't know any easy way to switch them. I tried Opera with the last computer and just prefer either IE or Netscape. I have no problem with Bill Gates. I'd just like to be able to click on the links that are posted here and open the URL's instead of having open Netscape and then copy and paste them.

Oddly enough, of all my bookmarks in IE the only one I can get into is my bank. Everything else gives me that above message.

Now, I'm going to copy and past your links to look at your pictures.

Hey Marv, using your camera much these days? Here's a couple of shots taken this past week. And to keep on topic, the birds don't smoke.
