I agree with your comment about what is the primary treatment at these centers.

I DISAGREE with your comment that things such as Acupuncture and Homeopathy are there to make the patient feel good after the surgery has removed the cancer.

The essence of the INTEGRATIVE approach is the utilization of ALL beneficial therapies, coordinated, in the treatment and restoration of health regarding the WHOLE patient rather than the diminution of the patient into some broken machine in which the removal of a diseased part is considered sufficient treatment, a view held by "standard" medicine.

I disagree with the implication that surgery is sufficient to remove the cancer. Frequent checks for recurrence

Re: Virtually Zero Alternative Cancer Research Occuring

most be made in those patients that have had surgery, and in even the best result cases, the cancer can and does return later. Surgery is a stopgap which treats the principle symptoms NOT the root cause.

Neither is chemotherapy, a euphemism for POISONING a sufficient treatment though its use is widespread and its results fair. The destruction of the patient's immune system to get rid of one disease leaves them open to death from even the common cold – NOT a wise idea.

Interestingly, of people who have had chemotherapy and survived the cancer, many will REFUSE IT A SECOND TIME and chose death rather than repeat the experience, a telling indictment of it.

The future will view chemotherapy as something as primitive to our century as bloodletting was to earlier centuries.

CitizenJimserac

Yes I would agree that the current treatments are for the most a failure especially in chemo therapy and radiology treatments. From what I can understand these treatments are used as a primary treatment which have a short term impact on some cancers but fail to control the disease in most cases. Even the Doctors dispensing these treatments admit

this consequence.

What really needs to be disclosed to all patients is the reality of the disease progression despite surgery, chemo and radiation.

That's the hard part for any Oncologist to admit the truth to someone who wants desperately to live.

Are there answers to this dilemma, well I think there are but certainly not in the continuation of immune suppressant chemo which if it cannot

the cancers growth may in fact spur the spreading of the

the bodies natural defences may well account for the spread treatments.

Sincerely, Rod.

Exactly.

Let it be admitted – we ALL want the same goal, a cure.

CitizenJimserac

Yes lets see the sceptics admit that the present system is a failure due to lack of science.

Exactly.
