

Re: Target Readership?

Re: Target Readership?

Source: <http://newsgroups.derkeiler.com/Archive/Rec/rec.arts.sf.composition/2005-08/msg00444.html>

- From: Bill Swears <wswears@xxxxxxx>
 - Date: Tue, 02 Aug 2005 22:16:28 -0800
-

sunwolf wrote:

When you begin to write a story do you write it to a target reader base from the start or do you just write what comes and let it form it's own "readership identity" (for lack of a better term)?

The general answer you've been getting is to just tell your story. While that's good advice, I can think of some exceptions. YA seems to be one, since the word counts are somewhat lower for the novel, and you have to deal with the sticky subjects a little more deftly.

Are you intending to write Fantasy or Science Fiction? If so, you've been lurking in a good place.

were you looking for a more specific answer? If so, you might want to rephrase the question a bit.

Bill

--

Bill Swears

They that can give up essential liberty to obtain a little temporary safety deserve neither liberty nor safety.

Ben Franklin, 1755 "Historical Review of Pennsylvania"

To think that was once a right wing comment. In the land of Homeland Security it seems.. Suspiciously left-wing.

.

Re: Target Readership?